

Intelligence and Terrorism

Porter J. Goss before the Senate Armed Services Committee:

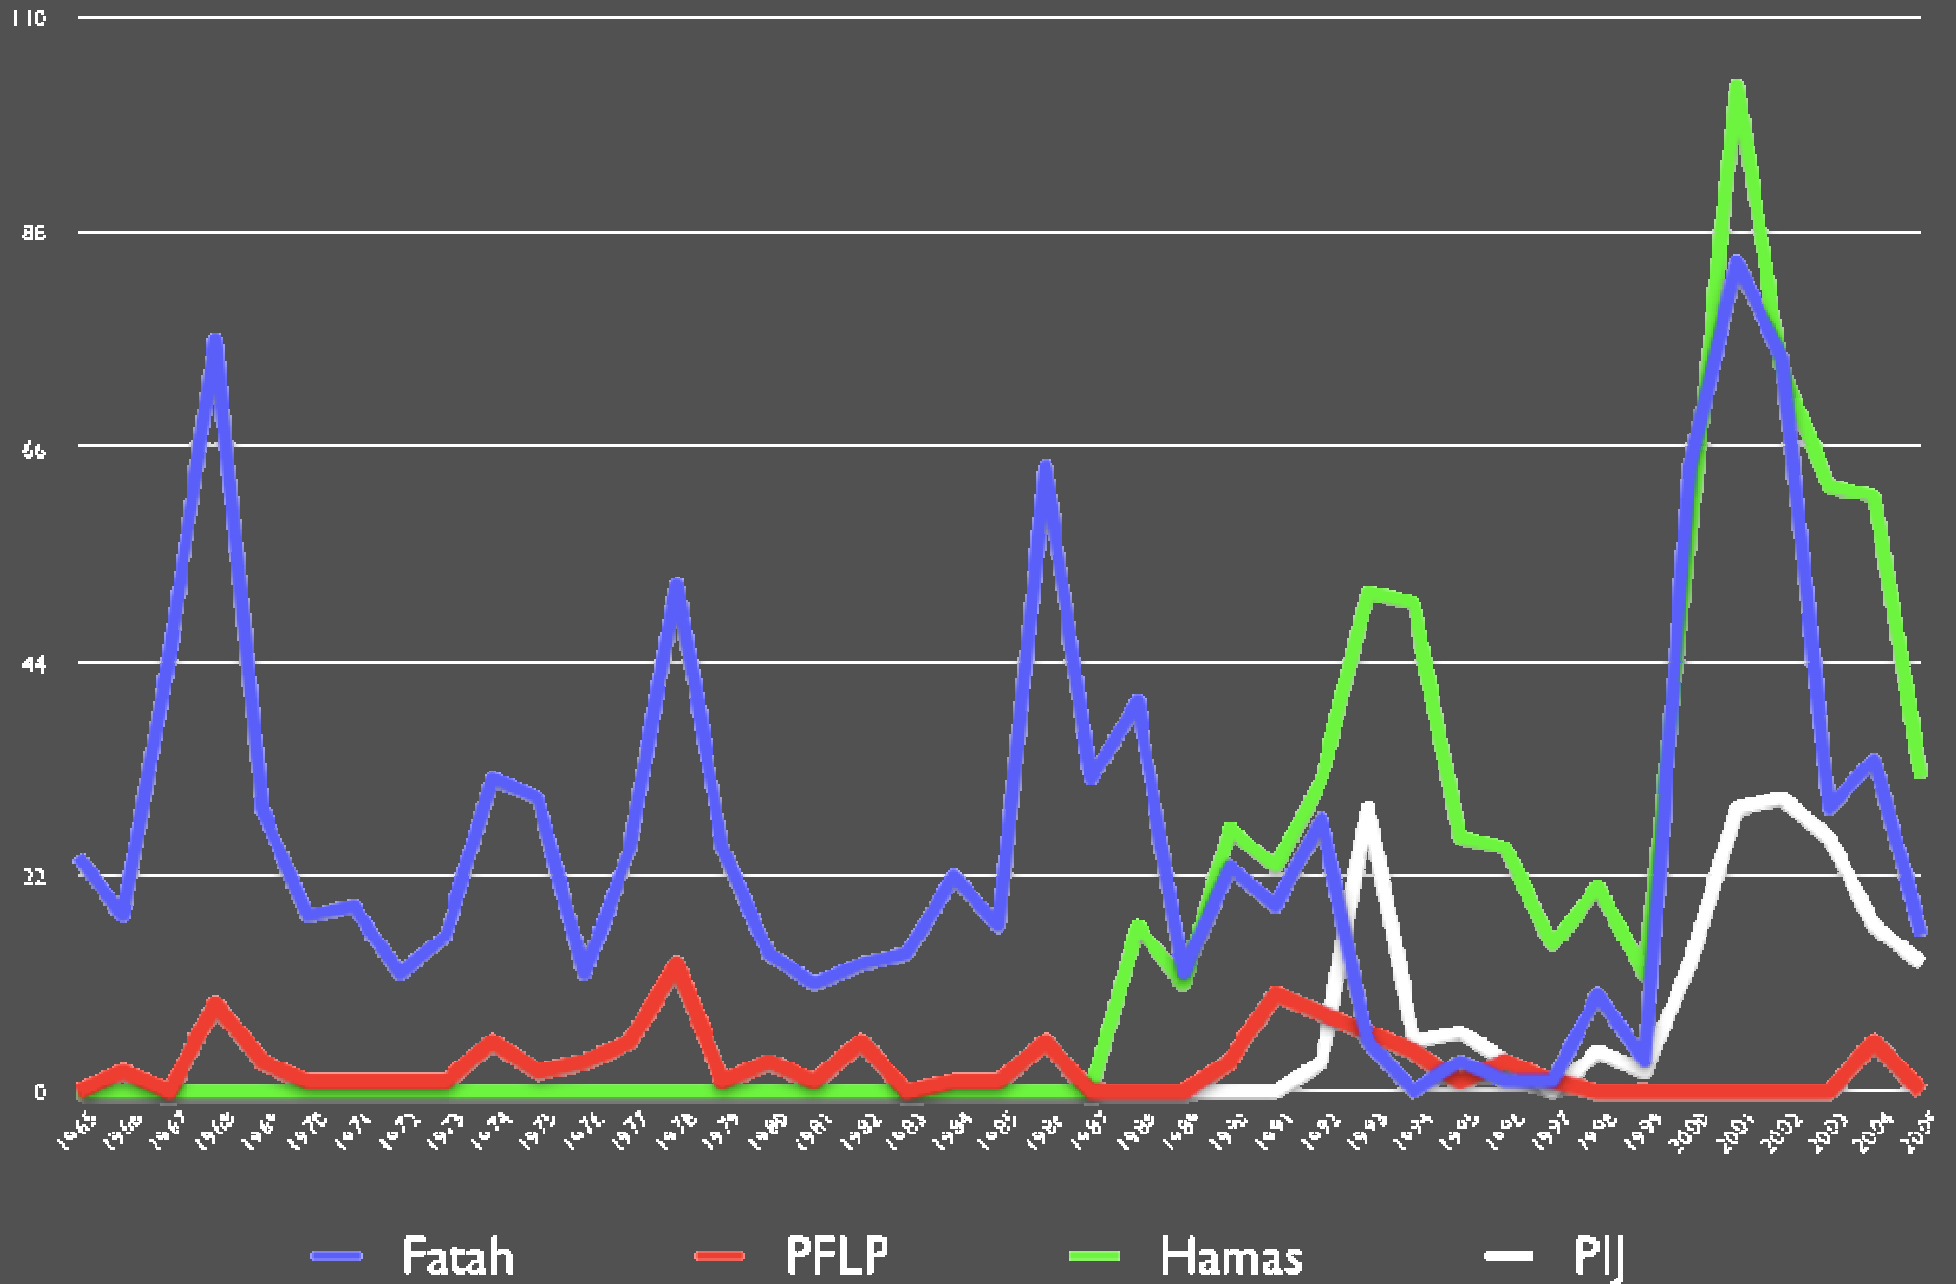

- “The war on terrorism has presented the Intelligence Community with challenges unlike any before. We are facing small groups of terrorists and extremist rather than standing armies. They operate out of homes and caves rather than military bases and government entities. They don't wear uniforms, they don't use conventional ordnance, and they don't observe norms and standards of civilized society. And only a few individuals may know the complete plan of a given terrorist plot”.

The International Challenge

- Terrorism has no borders - intelligence organizations do.
- Flow of information between organizations and countries is highly problematic even among allies.
- Violations of Sovereignty.
